News and the Jews

The week in review

Supporting Saddam-

Tuesday about 2,000 Arabs held a pro-Saddam Hussein rally in Gaza City. The Associated Press reports that leaders of the event, representing the local chapter of Hussein's Baath Party, handed out checks of $10,000 to the families of 36 Arabs killed by IDF troops over the past several months. Hussein recently raised the reward to families of suicide bombers from $10,000 to $25,000.

During the demonstration, Arabs carried pictures of Saddam and pledged to fight on Iraq's side if the western allies launch a strike to Baghdad. Hamas leader Sheik Ahmed Yassin made an appearance at the rally. He incited the crowd to continue targeting Israeli civilians and soldiers.

Terrorist Harboring Terrorist

Security officials are now confirming that about 25 Arabs - with blood on their hands - are hiding out in PLO leader Yasser Arafat's Mukata compound in Ramallah.

Among the terrorists are Mahmoud Darma, a Force 17 ringleader whose cell is responsible for murdering 15 Israelis. And Tawfiq Tirawi who heads the PA's intelligence service in Judea and Samaria. Tirawi is wanted for organizing shooting attacks on Gilo, smuggling arms, building explosives, and giving shelter to terrorists. He was also one of the Arabs involved in the hostage standoff at Bethlehem's Church of the Nativity during Operation Defensive Shield.

UN's Double Standard

Although most attention in the UN Thursday, was turned towards the speech by U.S. President George Bush - in which he demanded that Saddam Hussein comply with the U.N. or face military action - some apparently hypocritical aspects of UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan's remarks were also noted. Regarding the Israeli-Arab conflict, Annan said, that Israel's security needs need not be solved before Palestinian humanitarian needs are addressed, Kofi Annan said that this approach need not be taken regarding Iraq: "Iraq's compliance with the [U.N.] Council's resolutions... is an indispensable first step towards assuring the world that all Iraq's weapons of mass destruction have indeed been eliminated.

PEOPLE of the BOOK

Practically What To Do Now

The most immediate step to solving the problem is to settle the entire land. Wherever there is open space in Judea, Samaria, Gaza, and the Golan, settlements should be established. There is no need to displace Arabs; there is ample empty land.

This should not be done with fanfare. The idea is not to create an image, but to create a reality. When the land is settled by Jews, it will become obvious to all that we consider this as Jewish land, not theoretically, but practically. Indeed, the fact that settlement is the issue which the Arabs protest most vehemently should make it clear that it is Israel's highest priority. It is the most pragmatic means at Israel's disposal to change the balance of power in her favor. Once widespread settlement becomes a fact, it will be impossible to turn back the clock. The Arabs outside Israel will appreciate that the borders will not be moved back. And the Arabs inside Israel will understand that their future exists in coexistence with the Jews and not with struggle against them.

STUFF you should know

PA And The USA

The Palestinian Authority official newspapers often bolsters its anti-Western and anti-American writing with hateful articles and graphics it selects from other Arab press.

This week, it reprinted political cartoons depicting George Bush and Tony Blair as Nazis and portraying the US War on Terror as a cover for American policy aimed at controlling Arab oil.

The following appeared in Al-Hayat Al-Jadida, the official PA daily:

In this cartoon, the names "Bush" and "Blair" blend into a swastika.

The sign portrayed under the swastika reads: "Iraq"
